

Attached is a map of the trail showing one working route. There are other possibilities, but this one closely connects long stretches of single-track.

The blue lines on the map represent the tornado path. Purple dots follow a logging road through the damage. Where the purple dots take a sharp left is at the bottom of a sandy hill (if traveling North). The left turn is a seldom traveled logging road. The first part of the road may currently be torn up by logging machinery, but should be passable.

If you miss the "sharp left" don't worry. If you continue you'll pass the trail twice and/or end up at Van Alstine (if traveling North).